The Tom Gould CD “Distractions”

For more than thirty years, bass player Tom Gould and drummer George Vahamonde have worked together and shared their love for music. During all these years George always said he was not really enthusiastic about recording with click track, as Tom’s songs demanded. After so many years together, finally Tom decided to satisfy his friend and record an album without click track and come back again to the simplicity and rock and roll roots. Both musicians spent a month selecting the songs and when they had already chosen them, they forwarded them to guitar player Ron Rahilly who, after listening to them at home, came to the studio and felt immediately integrated in the sound and the spirit that the other two musicians wanted to capture. As it could not be otherwise, the album was recorded live with no click track, overdubs or alternate takes. The result was so gratifying for the musicians that Tom decided to bet on this album and give it the widest promotion he could. Ten personal tracks complete the album entitled "Distractions". To all those who like not only indie music but also hardcore and alternative music based on blues, rock and roll and garage, be sure this recording will fulfil your expectations and guarantee a more than a complete satisfaction.
